Obituary.
Ferdinand A. Wyman of Cambridge and Littleton entered into his reward Monday, September 27. He had been suffering from pernicious anemia more than a year, but friends little realized his extreme frailty, and to the family his death came as a distinct shock. Only last week he met and gave advice to clients in his office.
Funeral services were held in the Unitarian church, Littleton, Wednesday afternoon, Rev. William Channing Brown officiating, and Mrs. Jessie M. Young presiding at the organ. Interment was made in the Bruce-Wyman lot at Westlawn beside the form of the daughter laid away in childhood.
The deceased is survived by his wife, one daughter, Martha, three sons, Bruce, Ferdinand and Walter, one brother, Alfonso, Wyman, grandchildren, and other relatives, to whom his death is an unspeakable loss.
Mr. Wyman was born in Waltham nearly seventy years ago, but lived principally in Acton and Boxboro during his childhood. From the district schools he received a common education. To this as a foundation he continually added valuable information, and through his love of study and quick application strengthened the forces of his mentality, thus making himself worthy of a self-made man.
His first venture in the sphere of business activities was in the capacity of expert accountant. In every course of his pursuits he was expert, and therein lies the secret of his remarkable career. He believed in the acquisition of a thorough knowledge of his subject, and he worked indefatigably that he might understand all its phases and become master of it. As he often told the boys, "Spare no pains in qualifying yourself for your business or profession if you would live in a house and not a hut."
He became deeply interested in the study of law and with the help of books and the supervision of a lawyer, mastered that profession. This proved a wise choice, for his mind was peculiarly adapted to the occupation. He enjoyed attacking a knotty, intricate problem, and would make the most complete and thorough technical and scientific research, reading exhaustively and studying profoundly to obtain a grasp of the subject. His mind was not more wonderful in this particular than his memory was to retain knowledge, and with marked ability for application to the case in hand, he was pretty sure of success. Certainly Mr. Wyman earned his reputation for being one of the keenest lawyers in the commonwealth.

In September, 1875, he married Miss Harriet Bruce, a teacher of Littleton, and daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Marshall Ney Bruce, one of the staunch families of this town. The name of Bruce, made famous in Scotch history by the renowned warrior, Robert, was given to the first-born of the Wyman children. Well might Marshall Ney, the name of one of Napoleon's generals, have been similarly handed down.
Mr. and Mrs. Wyman lived for many years in Hyde Park, removing some time ago to Cambridge, their present home. Their vacations were frequently spent in Littleton, the town they both loved.
Although, as Mr. Wyman used to say, he had work enough on his desk to keep him busy for several years, he found time for outside interests. The Unitarian church filled a large place in his thought and activities. The Sunday school, of which he was a long-time superintendent, and the church conferences where his presence was welcomed and voice was heard to the edification of his audience, furnished an outlet for his religious aspirations. For the church in Littleton he had a peculiar fondness, and it seemed eminently fitting that one of the last tributes to his memory should be paid from its altar.
The deceased lives in a beautiful world. The fields and groves to him were teeming with interest. He loved to roam in the woods of the Bruce farm, gathering their fruits, and coming close to nature. It brought him rest and inspiration, but never was he so wrapt in the pleasures of those surroundings that he lost the sound of his wife's voice or the sight of his daughter's face. His family claimed his deepest affection and tenderest devotion. No distance could separate him from the dear ones at home, and when absent in body he kept in close touch with them by phone and sent gifts to them daily.
He was young in spirit and enjoyed young life. For him it furnished a pleasant pastime to narrate stories or explain something of interest in nature or science to the boys and girls that clustered about him, listening with wonder and admiration, and enjoying real companionship. His cheerfulness and sparkling wit created a happy, wholesome atmosphere, and old and young alike found delight in his company.
A life short but full and complete if measured in deeds, not years, has been founded out and helped make the world more wonderful and beautiful to those who enjoyed the honor of his acquaintance and fellowship.

Since writing the above meagre sketch our attention has been called to the following important facts from a biographical account in the Boston Herald:
"Mr. Wyman, during more than 50 years of practice, became one of the most distinguished lawyers of the country. He practiced before the supreme court of the United States more than 25 years, and represented the United States industrial interests in Europe at one period. He was the head or an associate in extensive and varied business enterprises, and the books which came from his pen from authoritative references were on a wide range of law and business subjects.
He was honored last year by a testimonial banquet at the Boston City club on the 50th anniversary of the admission to the bar.
He was connected prominently with the development of the electrical industry, having been associated with T. A. Edison, Amos P. Bear, W. H. Mead-overcraft, George Westinghouse and other pioneers in electrical advancement. He became general counsel for the Westinghouse Electric Company in 1890, and during the '90's was the owner of two electric lighting plants in Massachusetts. He was the founder of the Ferdinand A. Wyman Co., and a partner in Adel Low & Co., big leather houses.
His published works include a volume on the income tax, on which he was an international authority, as well as volumes on applied electricity, leather and tanning and a biography. The scope of his business activities and knowledge is indicated by his mission to Europe in which he represented American silver, gold, lead, zinc, calcium and shoe machinery interests.
He was instrumental in founding the Export Managers' club of New York as well as the Export Round Table of Boston, and was a delegate to the international trade conference. He was a charter member of the Hyde Park and Waverley clubs of Greater Boston, and a life member of the Unitarian association. At different periods he was superintendent of Sunday schools of the First Unitarian church, Hyde Park, and of the First Unitarian church, Manchester, N. H."
